Old-fashioned charming book Von Helpful Advice Count Caprioli's Wonderful Adventures at Sea written by Dieter Ott is a kind of old-fashioned charming book for teenagers or even younger readers that will keep you interested and amused for its 150 pages. The main character named Count Caprioli is typical hero encountered in books for kids written in 20th century or even earlier, always capable to solve any situation and problem, wise and full of confidence. The book is divided in several chapters that each for its title have short description of one of the adventures Count Caprioli will participate in, such as 'The Battle With The Giant Octopus', 'There's The Ride On a Shark' or 'Witzi the (flying) Dachshund', providing lot of excitement for kids who will full enjoy their reading. Im not sure did the author wrote it that way intentionally but each of the chapters can function as separate, therefore practically children can read it in whatever order they want. Dieter Ott made a book that reminded me of books I loved to read 30 years ago when I was a kid therefore if you would like for your kids to read something that is full of charm and reminds of books that were popular some time ago, give a chance to Count Caprioli's Wonderful Adventures at Sea both you and your kids wont be sorry. 0 von 0 Kunden fanden die folgende Rezension hilfreich. A treasure of a book Von BJW This treasure of a book took me back to amazing tales told by my parents before I went to sleep. Exciting, absolutely improbable adventures, but believable when you're young. The Count scatters adventure and magic wherever he goes, whether it's riding sharks, battling an octopus, or surviving adventures with pirates. This story has many stories within it, and could be turned into a graphic children's book in the style of Tin Tin. I highly recommend it.

Kurzbeschreibung "Those who spend time with the Count, find out that reality changes to a dream and a dream becomes reality." A Startling Discovery While rummaging around in the case-mates of one of the mightiest Austrian border castles, some youths discovered a secret compartment in the toolbox of a cannon dating back to the time of the Turkish invasion. They broke it open and found a letter and a number of diaries written in antiquated Hungarian. On closer examination, it was found that the letter and the diaries originated from the hand of a valet named Janos Pelegrin. This proved without doubt that the mysterious count Caprioli, secret agent to the emperor's court in Vienna, really existed. The letter of the valet Pelegrin: My dear young friends! I am writing to you because if anyone at any time should find this letter and my diaries, then it could only have been one of you. The older ones don't look for secrets any more. Which one of the grown ups could believe, that count Caprioli rode through the ocean on a shark, that my count melted the cannons of an enemy ship with a lightning bolt or that he loaded the cannons of the Fantoma with Dutch cheese balls. Yesterday we landed in St. Petersburg. The Russian czar admired our Fantoma and made a bet with the count, more fantastic and dare devilish I ever experienced with him. I don't know how he wants to win it. Surely, it will be extremely dangerous and adventurous. That is why I want to save my diaries first. I will hide them and continue in a new one. Your old Janos Pelegrin This book was written by my father and made it to the German Best Seller list back in 1965. It was reprinted twice, but never translated to English. I have finally done that and want to share this wonderful book with the English speaking world.
