We actually met Susan and Stuart in another life when France was not yet in the picture. I must admit I was also curious since we were after all to be part of the story. Of course the purchase and renovation of their French cottage was nothing new to us but it is only through this book and the detailed reflections that I came to realize how much Cuzance means to them. It is not the renovation of yet another house, no, its their getting acquainted with the people and its way of life in what is for them a far away country. I was ever so pleasantly surprised to read, feel and be part of every single experience in their French world. Now, being a citizen of the small neighbouring country and therefore seeing France with different eyes - perhaps in a more familiar way - it was therefore ever more intriguing to see how Susan relates on the French rural life, the hard labour when renovating their cottage along with the inevitable obstacles, French food, Paris, ..., in brief, on all that is French. I especially enjoyed her vivid descriptions, all the small things she notices and absorbs, all that is part of the French way of life. It was not difficult at all to feel and actually (re)live the French vibe, to let myself be carried away by her amazement, enthusiasm, eager way of trying to fit into their French rural community. I felt as if my family and I were again sitting at their outside dining table under a storm like loaded air or wandering through a French village or looking for a precious item at one of the many vide greniers - yes this is something we do share with the author or savouring the delicious croissants or simply enjoying the rural tranquility. This book beautifully accounts of all things, great and small, of the French countryside when renovating at the other side of the world and of Susans and Stuarts warm relationship with their new French friends.

Kurzbeschreibung Sequel to the bestselling 'Our House is Not in Paris' Join for the first time, or continue to share in this sequel, the French rmove trials and triumphs of Susan and Stuart Cutsforth, an ordinary Australian couple. Our House is Certainly Not in Paris is a magical memoir about their renovation of an old farmhouse in France. They devote their holidays to breathing life back into its ancient stone walls. It is so charmingly written that the reader is transported to their petite village and the people in this book become like old friends. This is a story about achieving dreams. It makes you want to grab life with both hands.
