A no holds barred account of a somewhat colorful life - I enjoyed it!Von RsammyI enjoyed this book. Having got to know Paul after the conclusion to his "story" I was interested to read how it had all begun. He certainly describes an eventful life - and it makes for a difficult read in parts; childhood poverty, lack of education, homophobia, homelessness and as the title gives away ... prostitution. Paul has obviously overcome a lot in his life and the simple fact that he is now happily married a writer shows how determined he is to achieve his dreams, especially considering his poor start in life. I wondered if the book would glamorize prostitution as the title kind of suggests it - it doesn't in my eyes although I was left kind of wondering if it was meant to. After all, Paul got himself out of a crappy life but made his living through prostitution, managing to travel to a fair few fancy places along the way - he then met his future husband and lived happily ever afterI think what shocked me was how "easy" prostitution seemed to be. By that I mean how easy to get business and how it appeared to me that everyone is at it and there is this whole world that I knew absolutely nothing about! Paul is a good writer, he has a knack of matter of fact "telling it how it is" with a certain poetic charm which really made the book enjoyable. If I didn't already know and admire Paul, would I "like" the character in the book? Honestly I don't know, but that actually contributed to my enjoyment of the book because I got the feeling Paul wouldn't give a damn and I admire that about the character! I certainly like the style in which the book is written and would recommend to anyone looking for a no holds barred account of someone's somewhat colorful life!

Kurzbeschreibung Paulyanna: International Rent-boy is an honest and frank portrayal of a working-class male prostitute's life. Many factors contribute in delivering the main character onto the streets. Some very typical, such as early abandonment, poverty, lack of education and sexual abuse. But Paul does not dwell too much on the past and refuses to allow these events to mar his ambition. At eighteen a lost train ticket leaves him stranded in the city after a job interview. He uses his questionable wits to make a quick decision that steers him down a rather dodgy path. Without added glamour or grit, Paul shares the raw accounts of his life as a rent-boy in the 90s, from London to Los Angeles. It may not have been pretty, and there was risk and danger as well as fun and thrills, but Paul had the audacity to succeed in his quest to obtain happiness, security and wealth. This is not an erotic tale. It is an ordinary account of day-to-day life as viewed from a unique perspective. A peek into what really goes on behind the glassy-eyed smile of a male street worker. Read about his life in this optimistic and fascinating roadbook adventure.

ber den Autor und weitere Mitwirkende A Black Country Lad who now lives in the Black Boy Land or Schwarzbubenland as it is called in Switzerland. Life started off badly and after spending a big part of it on the margins of society working as a rent-boy (gay male prostitute) I eventually found my husband (civil partner) in 2000 and a new chapter in my life began. Years on and we are still very happily married, or at least I am. He kept every single one of his promises and didn't tire or change his attitude towards me. Never once have I felt cold, hungry or scared. I now live in a detached property with a large garden in a small hamlet of 895 residence. Set in the foothills of the Jura mountains. I am surrounded on all sides by hilly forests, a small stream runs through its centre. It really is a proper piece of paradise. When I'm feeling extra spiritual it is easy to imagine. We are nestled in the palms of an almighty giant. God if you like. Whom, despite all I had done saw fit to watch over me and guide me to a life worth living. I have a beautiful black cat called Darcy and also a Gordon Setter girl-dog name Asherah. We live an idyllic existence. I now enjoy the small pleasures in life, gone are the pressures of Big City Life nowadays, I can see sky out of my windows. I experience every season. In the Spring and Summer, whilst out walking in the woods we often make a fire to cook a jumbo sausage. My dog likes sausage walks. Autumn is spend harvesting our homegrown and raking up leaves. I spend a lot of my time gardening. Chopping and stacking wood for the log burner that heats our home throughout the Winter season. I'm a Glippy a glamorous hippy. We are extremely green and energy efficient, I'm a recycling master. I wear what I call my doggy clothes mostly, saving my glad rags for when visiting the city. I like to pretend I'm living in the olden days and going to town is a really big event. So that is the new improved me. I must admit I do still enjoy cannabis but now, I drink red wine also. I always had a dream to become a writer and although not quite there yet am doing everything I can to make it a reality.
