ber den Autor und weitere MitwirkendeKipjo K. Ewers was born July 1, 1975. At an early age, he had an active imagination. By the time he started kindergarten he would create fictional stories, one of his favorites was about a character named Old Man Norris who hated everyone in the world except for him. When Kipjo attended our Lady of Victory Elementary school in Mount Vernon, NY he continued writing and reading stories to his classmates. His teacher, Mrs. Green, told him the children would laugh. However, she would remind Kipjo that this is how some of the great stories they read actually came about so don't let what others think deter him from continuing to write. After elementary school, Kipjo was enrolled at Salesian High School in New Rochelle, NY. He would continue his education at Iona College majoring in English and Business Administration. A career in the corporate world awaited Kipjo after college. He worked for several major firms within the New York area, but his passion was always to be a journalist/writer. In his off time, he would write for e-Fed wrestling games and composed a number of short stories, but these were not published. He also began creating 3D graphic artwork, which can be found on sites such as Renderosity.com and Runtime.com. In 2012, Kipjo began creating a new superhuman universe. Finding inspiration and solace in the loss of his first daughter due to an unfortunate miscarriage that devastated both his loving wife and Co-Founder, Jacquelin, and himself; he began writing a hero origin story now titled The First. He created a world for his daughter where she not only lives, but is the strongest superhuman in the universe. He hopes to continue her story as both a novel and comic book series.
